FOREIGN MISSIONS

As Israel gave praise and worship when it was delivered out of Egypt and reached the other side of the Red Sea, so it would one day give thanks for its deliverance out of a future exile, according to God's promise in Isaiah 12. So great would be Israel's desire to praise God, it would want to "make known his deeds among the peoples." With an even greater sense than Israel of the spiritual reality of our deliverance and with hearts full of gratitude for Jesus who has covered us from the wrath of God and become our strength, our song, and our salvation, we also want to make known his deeds among the peoples. And that is what your missionaries are doing together with you.

Together with you, as you pray and give, new missionaries have gone and are going to the field. Together with you in Asia, students who completed their internships last year were ordained and began new mission works. Together with you in Uganda, Knox School of Theology (KST) completed a new dormitory and a new administration building in Mbale; and its first graduates are preparing for licensure, ordination, or serving their churches and presbyteries in new and better-prepared ways. Together with you in Uruguay, members of a Bible study in Maldonado started worship services this year. Together with you, the mission works planted by your missionaries in Uganda have become part of an indigenous presbytery; and your missionaries are assisting its pastors and ruling elders to organize, to make budgets, and to take on more responsibilities in the church's work.

These are just a few of the things that you and your missionaries accomplished together during the last year. Let us give thanks to the Lord, and pray with our missionaries, that in the coming year there will be more missionaries and even more can be done as we together "make known his deeds among the peoples."
